Microsoft has decent products at reasonable prices, that is why they are the largest software vendor. However they are not the only one. I can think of three other operating systems and a couple other office suites just off hand and I am not in the computer industry, there could easily be more that I am un aware of. Very often I can find share ware or even free ware that does the job for me and use these types of programs all the time.

I think it is a mistake to try to disassemble Microsoft. The goal of intergrating programs to work better together is the way we should be headed not tearing them down.
